EXPERIENTIAL EXTENSIONS

EDWARD S. JOHNSTON

FEBRUARY 9 - MARCH 1, 2008
DUDERSTADT CENTER GALLERY

Many phenomena find their way into my mental landscape – some consciously noted, many not. These various bits of experience mix together to shape my understanding of reality and memory of events.

“The real patterns of feeling...how daydreaming weaves in and out of realistic thought, how the feeling of a place, a time of day, an ordinary situation is built up – these felt events, which compose the fabric of mental life, usually pass unobserved, unrecorded and therefore essentially unknown to the average person...They pass unrecorded because they are known without any symbolic mediation, and therefore without conceptual form. We usually have no objectifying images of such experiences to recall and recognize.” *

This body of work begins with photographs I took while walking from my apartment to the School of Art & Design last August. Sections of the photographs are digitally manipulated to generate animations, 3D objects, and prints that explore varying patterns of my felt experiences that emerge while thinking about that walk.

BIO ARTOGRAPHY

SEPTEMBER 25 - OCTOBER 20, 2009

The Center for Organogenesis Bio-Artography

The University of Michigan Center for Organogenesis unites scientists from many fields who work together to study organ growth, function and disease. The goal from these studies is to design new and effective ways to treat disease and repair damaged organs. In the course of this research, we use the microscope and special stains or "colors" to look at tissues for changes that could affect our health. These tiny biological structures are often beautiful and we share them with you here as "Bio-Artography", a fascinating combination of art and science.

All images have been submitted to the Center for Organogenesis from Faculty, Research Scientists, Postdoctoral & Predoctoral Fellows, Graduate and Undergraduate Students. All proceeds support research training at the University of Michigan, Center for Organogenesis. www.bioartography.com
