

Islamic Political Video Tapes

FAWZI ABDULRAZAK
DAR MAHJAR, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

In 1990, I began collecting videos which covered several years of political and intellectual gatherings, both formal and informal of Muslims living in different countries around the world. By 1997, there were no longer any such videos available on the market. There are two main reasons for their disappearance.

First: Economics. When the producers began to realize that there was not much of a profit to be gained from mass-producing these tapes, they ceased to video these gatherings.

Second: Politics. These Islamic videos presented views and ideologies that were critical of and strictly forbidden in traditional Muslim countries. Therefore most of the videos in this list were produced in Europe. In the mid-1990's, however, the French government began clamping down on Islamic political activities and effectively closed down the production and circulation of such videos in the open market.

The tapes in this list were purchased in three separate groups and locations:

The first group was acquired from the Société Okba in Paris, where they had been produced. For the most part these tapes were produced commercially for Muslim clients in France and possibly North Africa. However, there are a few tapes in this group which were produced by Muslim organizations specifically for the use of the organizations' members. The subject matter of these tapes is the political and religious situation in North Africa (Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia). They feature lectures by such well known leaders as Rāshid al-Ghannūshī (Tunisia), 'Abd al-Salām Yāsīn (Morocco), and 'Abbās Madanī (Algeria).

This group of tapes was produced in the French SECM format, which can be viewed or heard only with French-made VCR's. For a wider audience they need to be converted on the PAL (European) format or NTSC (the American format). These videos are in both color and black and white. Most of them run from between 45 minutes to two hours.

The second group, which constitutes the bulk of the videos on this list, were purchased in the mid-1990s from Dar al-Dawa Bookshop in London (97 Westbourn Grove, Bayswater, London W2 4UW UK).

Unlike the videos from France, the majority of these tapes from England were produced by the Muslim Student Society (MSS) in England and Ireland. The MSS is a non-profit organization which invited leaders or representatives of Islamic parties, groups, or communities from all parts of the world to present their views and political agendas to a sophisticated audience of intellectuals from England and Europe. Some of the videos in this list present the actual lectures. These lectures were taped and duplicated at the time of the event and made available for the audience immediately following the lecture for a small fee.

The sophistication of the MSS organization is evident from the Islamic leaders who gathered in England to meet with fellow Muslims to lecture and often to raise funds for their particular causes. Such topics that were presented were “Islamic government,” “Islam and the West,” and “Women in Islam.”

In 1997, the MSS seems to have scaled down and possibly to have ceased its outreach activities. As a result, the owner of al-Dawa Bookshop, Mr. Shaykh Muḥammad al-Miṣrī, told me that after the MSS had stopped producing videos, he bought their entire stock, which I consequently purchased from him.

Although these videos have a universal message, they were all produced in the European format (PAL), which is incompatible with the French or the American video systems and need to be converted for use on machines produced in other regions of the world.

The third and last group (approximately 15 videotapes) was collected in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, and Rabat, Morocco. These videos are very different in content from the French or British ones. They were produced mostly by small companies and dedicated individuals who wished to bring to the attention of Muslims around the world the plight of their co-religionists in Somalia, the Sudan, Kosovo, Chechnya, Afghanistan, and Bosnia. These videos were also used to solicit donations for religious organizations in those regions and to entice Muslims to join in Jihad against their enemies.

The organization of this list is by Arabic title. Each title has been translated into English followed by the full names of the lecturers, their titles, positions, and countries of origin in the order in which they appear in the lectures. A list of all the political parties that are represented in the videos is also provided.

Finally, there are a few very important, very rare titles which are missing from this group of videos, such as Aḥmad Yāsīn's lectures about Ḥamās and 'Abd al-Karīm Zindānī's three-hour interview with 'Abbās Madanī, the founder of al-Inqādh Party in Algeria. Despite these few missing elements, the list should be of great interest to students of the Middle East, as it gives access to the views of the leading contemporary Islamic thinkers and political figures and to their activities around the world.
