TEACHING

Teaching Philosophy

My goal in teaching undergraduate and graduate students is to stress the skills for inquiry into political ideas as much as the knowledge of political thought. The skills I focus on are the analysis, interpretation and evaluation of political concepts, arguments and ideas. This requires much practice, most of which is writing. It also requires attention to the way in which academic inquiry is a professional practice, with specific disciplinary norms and conventions. I try to reach these goals by making my objectives and approach very clear to students and by being available to students also outside formal classroom instruction.
